(2) Reasons for the Revision

With respect to net sales, based on the actual results for the nine months ended December 31, 2025, and the latest order outlook, we have revised the forecast as stated in section (1) above.

With respect to operating profit, although the FC business within the FC/MD segment is expected to continue experiencing higher costs due to rising raw material prices such as gold, the CTC segment is expected to record increased profit driven by a rise in orders associated with expanding inspection demand related to generative AI. Accordingly, we have revised the forecast as stated in section (1) above.

With respect to ordinary profit and profit attributable to owners of parent, although foreign exchange gains are expected to decrease under the assumed exchange rate of 145 yen per US dollar, we have revised the forecast as stated in section (1) above, reflecting the projected increase in operating profit.
